T wo recurring themes are making headlines in the capital city this week — compassion and inclusion.

The conversation, which drew about 100 locals to the Paul Sawyer Public Library on Sunday, centered around how to make Frankfort and Franklin County a more compassionate city. At Wednesday’s On the Table event, also at the library, folks of all ages participated in open-ended discussions about ways to foster a more cohesive sense of belonging and respect for residents of varied ages, backgrounds and ethnicities.

Sponsored by the Franklin County Interfaith Council, the event will repeat this year starting in May. The Frankfort Community Foundation and the City of Frankfort will sponsor the first event to cover the cost of six refilling stations.

Let’s help schools fill void left by FPB
Dear Editor,

Our letter is in response to Frankfort Community Schools’ request to the Frankfort Plant Board at its December board meeting to cover the cost of six water bottle filling stations for the two high schools as part of FPB’s Frankfort on Tap initiative promoting health and environmental stewardship.

Who doesn’t drink from a refillable water bottle today? A huge advantage of the TKO bottles is that you don’t have to carry water bottles in your bag. Maybe yours supports your favorite team or your original or the date you got married. Or maybe you like yours cold, so it’s insulated. Water bottles are popular. Our letter is in response to Frankfort Community Schools’ request to the Frankfort Plant Board at its December board meeting to cover the cost of six water bottle filling stations for the two high schools as part of FPB’s Frankfort on Tap initiative promoting health and environmental stewardship.

Who doesn’t drink from a refillable water bottle today? A huge advantage of the TKO bottles is that you don’t have to carry water bottles in your bag. Maybe yours supports your favorite team or your original or the date you got married. Or maybe you like yours cold, so it’s insulated. Water bottles are popular. Our letter is in response to Frankfort Community Schools’ request to the Frankfort Plant Board at its December board meeting to cover the cost of six water bottle filling stations for the two high schools as part of FPB’s Frankfort on Tap initiative promoting health and environmental stewardship.

Who doesn’t drink from a refillable water bottle today? A huge advantage of the TKO bottles is that you don’t have to carry water bottles in your bag. Maybe yours supports your favorite team or your original or the date you got married. Or maybe you like yours cold, so it’s insulated. Water bottles are popular.