With a little more varsity experience, Franklin County was able to ride to a 55-6 win over Western Hills Friday at Benny Watkins Field. SPORTS B1

Six years later, city has seen few chances for enforcement

T he Frankfort City Commission approved a fairness ordinance six years ago. Since then, only four cases have officially made it through the system the law establishes. Commissioners approved the ordinance in a 3-2 vote during a special meeting on Aug. 29, 2013, making Frankfort the fifth city in the state to pass a fairness ordinance, or a law that protects people from being discriminated against in the workplace, public and housing based on their race, color, religion, national origin, familial status, age, disability, gender identity or sexual orientation. In the city's

A community summit focused on preventing youth substance abuse in Franklin County is planned for Sept. 26-27.

By Chanda Veno
The State Journal

Just Say Yes: Solutions for Substance Abuse Prevention will engage people and organizations across the county, including educators, youth service organizations, businesses, coaches, law enforcement, faith groups and artists. "The opioid problem is so massive and intractable and complex, it's going to take everybody coming to the table with whatever tools they have," said Amelia Berry, executive director of Yes Arts (formerly Hands

By McKenna Horsley
The State Journal

By Chanda Veno
The State Journal

By Chris Easterly
Contributing writer

A community summit focused on preventing youth substance abuse in Franklin County is planned for Sept. 26-27.

Just Say Yes: Solutions for Substance Abuse Prevention will engage people and organizations across the county, including educators, youth service organizations, businesses, coaches, law enforcement, faith groups and artists. "The opioid problem is so massive and intractable and complex, it's going to take everybody coming to the table with whatever tools they have," said Amelia Berry, executive director of Yes Arts (formerly Hands

By Chanda Veno
The State Journal

By Chris Easterly
Contributing writer

A community summit focused on preventing youth substance abuse in Franklin County is planned for Sept. 26-27.

Just Say Yes: Solutions for Substance Abuse Prevention will engage people and organizations across the county, including educators, youth service organizations, businesses, coaches, law enforcement, faith groups and artists. "The opioid problem is so massive and intractable and complex, it's going to take everybody coming to the table with whatever tools they have," said Amelia Berry, executive director of Yes Arts (formerly Hands